Introduction

Hotels across the United States contributed a combined $26.1 billion in lodging taxes to state and local government revenues in 2025, according to a January 2026 report from the American Hotel & Lodging Association (AHLA). Lodging tax revenues generated by hotels are expected to reach $26.6 billion in 2026.

With billions at stake, it's no surprise hospitality tax compliance is under the microscope – and notoriously difficult to manage. Tax obligations can vary based on length of stay and how accommodations are listed and booked. Occupancy tax rates and rules differ across states, counties, and cities – and change frequently. Hawaii, Illinois, and Rhode Island are among the jurisdictions that added new taxes or expanded the tax base for existing taxes in 2026.

Taxes on rooms are just the beginning. Businesses that operate hotels, motels, resorts, bed-and-breakfasts, and short-term rentals have other tax obligations as well. A January 2025 analysis by Oxford Economics and AHLA found the U.S. hotel sector collected and remitted $2.4 billion in sales taxes from guest food, beverage, and retail purchases in 2024. Hotels also paid an estimated $23.3 billion in property taxes in 2024.

Meeting your obligations is critical to staying in good standing with tax authorities. Hospitality businesses can be hit with significant fines and penalties for noncompliance on top of owing back taxes.

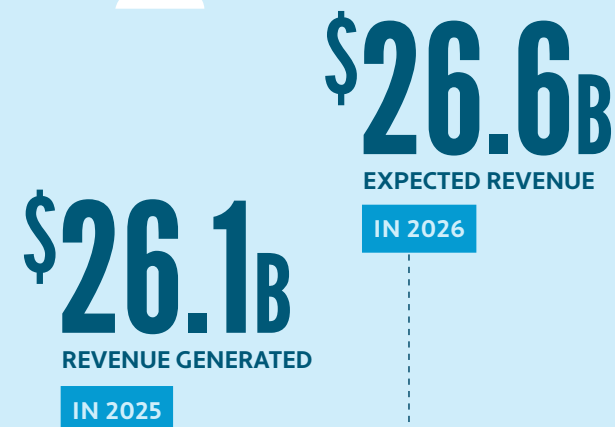

Automating tax compliance helps hospitality management companies not only reduce audit risk but increase efficiency.

This guide provides an in-depth look at the most pressing tax compliance challenges for the hospitality industry, including those beyond lodging tax. It describes how occupancy tax software and automation help solve them so your company can focus on providing guests with a five-star experience.

How automation transforms compliance management for hotels

Managing tax and compliance obligations in the hospitality industry has traditionally been a manual, reactive process. Finance and accounting teams are often responsible for tracking changing tax rates, filing deadlines, exemption rules, and licensing requirements across dozens or hundreds of jurisdictions using spreadsheets, email, and disconnected systems.

This manual approach is highly time-consuming and inherently error-prone. Even a single mistake can result in costly penalties. The risk is widespread: A 2025 survey by Censuswide and Avalara found that nearly 60% of hotel executives received a tax audit notice in the past five years, underscoring how closely government agencies scrutinize compliance.

Tax compliance software built for the specific needs of the hospitality industry uses automation and AI to lessen the burden of manual tax compliance, improve accuracy, and reduce risk.

Automation embeds compliance directly into financial and operations workflows, helping your hotel operate more efficiently. By cutting time spent on manual calculations, reconciliations, and tracking filing deadlines, a dedicated tax compliance solution shifts compliance from a variable, labor-intensive cost to a predictable, repeatable process.

Tax compliance software also helps with audit readiness. A centralized digital audit trail of calculated tax, filed returns, exemption certificates, payments, and licenses helps your finance team respond more quickly and confidently to regulatory inquiries.

As your hotel portfolio expands, a tax compliance solution built for the hospitality industry scales by automatically adapting to new properties, jurisdictions, and transaction volumes.

With this foundation in place, your hospitality business is better equipped to address the industry's most complex compliance challenges.

CHALLENGE 1

Ensuring accuracy when calculating and collecting lodging tax

Tax authorities refer to lodging tax by many names, including occupancy tax, sales tax, bed tax, and tourist tax. Hospitality management companies need to know when to charge guests tax and how much tax to charge. The more properties you manage, the more complicated this gets.

Since there's no one-size-fits-all approach to how jurisdictions regulate lodging tax, it can be difficult to track which rates and rules apply in all your property locations. Some local jurisdictions impose resort taxes and other special taxes as well. The Censuswide survey found 35% of respondents across the hotel and short-term rental sectors reported managing different rates across locations as one of the most time-consuming and challenging aspects of tax compliance.

Even if you know how much tax to collect from a guest today, that doesn't mean you'll collect the same amount from another guest tomorrow. As mentioned, tax rates and rules are subject to change. Other factors can come into play, such as tax exemptions for guests who book extended stays, typically 30 days or more although length-of-stay thresholds vary by jurisdiction.

If you list rooms with an online travel agency (OTA) like Expedia, Booking.com, Airbnb, or Vrbo, you'll need to know whether the platform collects taxes for your property. In many states, marketplace facilitator laws make OTAs responsible for collecting and remitting state and local lodging taxes. But not always.

It's also important to know whether a marketplace uses a merchant model, in which the OTA is generally responsible for lodging taxes, or an agency model, in which the hotel remits tax to authorities. Today, many OTAs offer both. Your business must be able to properly account for tax in either situation. The technology and processes you use to calculate tax can also present challenges. Phocuswright reports the majority of U.S. hotels run on legacy property management, point-of-sale (POS), and back-office accounting systems. Trying to manage lodging tax compliance using outdated or incompatible software systems leads to inefficient workarounds. Calculating tax manually is time-consuming and introduces the risk of human error.

HOW AVALARA CAN HELP

Automating tax calculation improves accuracy and helps prevent guests from being overcharged for lodging or other purchases. Industry-leading tax compliance software continuously applies current tax rates and rules at the time of transaction and centralizes tax data, calculations, filings, and documentation across properties and jurisdictions.

Machine learning models help interpret transaction data from property management systems and POS platforms. AI classifies taxable and exempt charges more accurately and helps handle complex scenarios such as bundled services.

For finance leaders, this creates greater control, standardization, and visibility without increasing headcount or administrative burden as your lodging business grows.

Avalara AvaTax for Hospitality automatically applies regularly updated occupation tax and sales tax rates at the time of checkout. The cloud-based solution calculates and collects tax across sales channels and recognizes when a guest's long-term stay qualifies for a tax exemption. It also provides a central location for storing hospitality tax compliance information. Through APIs, AvaTax for Hospitality seamlessly integrates with your property management system and other systems you already use.

Avalara Tax Content for Lodging is an ideal solution for businesses that prefer not to connect their booking system to the cloud. Receive regularly updated lodging tax content that can be uploaded to your system for more accurate tax calculation across U.S. jurisdictions. Avalara has tax content for more than 30,000 jurisdictions.

CHALLENGE 2

Reducing the burden of occupancy tax returns filing

After you've figured out how much tax to collect, you must remit tax to the appropriate authorities. Some tax agencies require you to file monthly, while others have quarterly, semiannual, or annual deadlines.

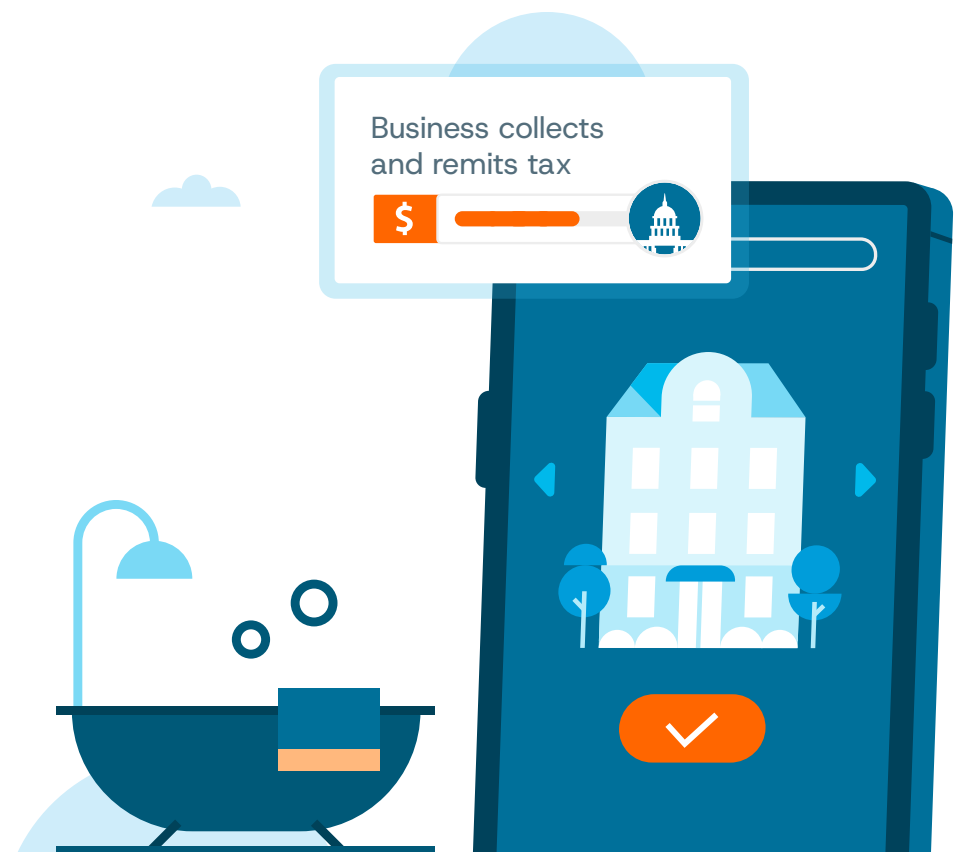

The Censuswide survey found that 37% of respondents in the hospitality industry believe filing returns is one of the most time-consuming and difficult aspects of tax compliance. Tracking deadlines and manually filing returns are particularly burdensome if your hospitality management company has properties in more than one jurisdiction. The process is even harder for teams that need to piece together tax data stored in disparate systems. These manual processes can lead to filing late or inaccurate returns, which in turn can lead to fines and audit penalties.

Remember that online travel agencies may collect and remit part or all of the tax owed on your behalf, but your business is generally still responsible for filing returns and paying any remaining tax owed.

HOW AVALARA CAN HELP

Automation provides a more efficient way to prepare and file returns and remit lodging tax. A tax compliance solution built for the hospitality industry reduces manual effort by preparing returns using transaction data already captured through calculation. Your finance team can save time when filing schedules, jurisdictional requirements, and tax remittance are managed within a centralized platform.

Automation also improves accuracy. AI and machine learning can identify mismatches or irregularities between calculated tax and filing data before returns are prepared plus surface potential issues such as missed filings before they show up in an audit.

Avalara Returns for Hospitality uses AI and automation to prepare and file thousands of lodging tax returns and remit payments on your behalf. The solution lowers risk through improved accuracy and more timely filing. You'll have a record of all tax filings and payments that can be easily accessed if your business is audited. The AI notice assistant helps resolve issues faster – no need to manually input data if you receive a notice from a jurisdiction. And with time saved, your team is freed up to focus on revenue-generating tasks.

Handling tax-exempt hotel guests with confidence

Some guests are exempt from paying lodging tax and sales tax. Guests that qualify for an exemption may include:

- A government employee traveling on official business when payment is made directly by the government agency
- A guest representing a nonprofit organization with tax-exempt status
- A guest whose stay is paid directly by a school or religious institution

Jurisdictions have different rules for these guests than they do for those who book long-term stays. And those rules vary across jurisdictions.

In Washington state, for example, sales made directly to the U.S. government are exempt from retail sales and lodging taxes. But if the federal employee pays for the room themselves, they must pay tax, even if they will later be reimbursed by the federal agency. Washington doesn't grant tax-exempt status for state, city, or county employees.

Government employees may be exempt from California's transient occupancy tax when traveling on official government business. California law gives local governments in the state the option to impose the tax or not.

Auditors check whether businesses that provide lodging can prove proper documentation for tax-exempt sales. Your business needs to collect an exemption certificate from each guest who qualifies for a tax exemption. You also need to validate and store certificates so they're easily accessible. Missing or expired certificates can lead to fines and penalties.

HOW AVALARA CAN HELP

Collecting all these paper forms by hand or email, scanning them, and storing them as PDFs on a shared drive might work in a pinch, but there's a better solution. Capturing and storing exemption certificates and forms in a dedicated system helps streamline the process and ensure certificates are on hand when you need them.

Automating exemption certificate management helps your hotel reduce audit risk, adapt to ever-changing tax laws, and maintain customer relationships as your company's footprint expands. Machine learning matches exemption certificates to guests and transactions, lessening manual work and improving accuracy. AI and intelligent document processing automatically validate certificates and flag incomplete or inaccurate ones for review.

Avalara Exemption Certificate Management makes it easier to collect and store exemption certificates and forms for tax-exempt customers. The AI-first solution captures guest data and saves it as a digitally signed replication of an exemption certificate so the correct information can be reported to tax authorities and quickly found during an audit. Hotels can also upload an image of a document. Certificates are saved in a centralized repository for convenient shared access between hotel staff and finance and accounting teams.

Keeping track of business licenses and renewals

While lodging tax compliance is a major hurdle for the hospitality industry, it's not the only challenge. Staying on top of business license applications and renewals is tricky whether you manage a single hotel or a hotel chain.

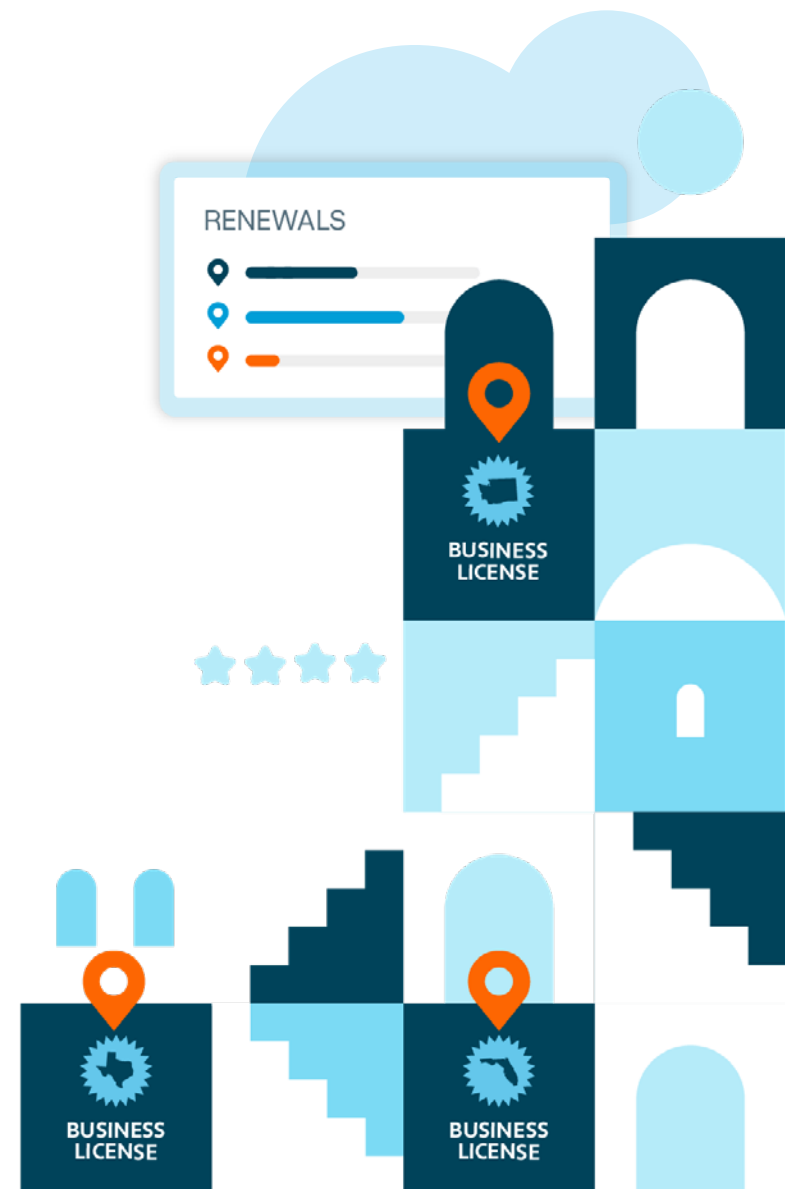

As with tax compliance, jurisdictions have different license and permit requirements. Hospitality management companies generally require multiple licenses for each property location. Not having the right business licenses and permits can prevent your business from legally operating, leading to revenue loss and reputational damage.

You'll need state and local business licenses just to open your doors. Some jurisdictions mandate special lodging permits as well. If you have an on-site restaurant, you'll need local and/or state health department permits. And if you serve alcohol or your rooms have a minibar, you'll need a liquor license.

It's important to submit current application forms and fill them out accurately to prevent approval delays. Some jurisdictions require proof of compliance with sales and occupancy tax laws before issuing or renewing licenses.

Once you've obtained all the necessary licenses for your properties, you then have to track renewal dates that vary across jurisdictions. This can quickly become overwhelming, especially if you manage many properties and you rely on spreadsheets.

HOW AVALARA CAN HELP

Automating license management or outsourcing the job to a partner saves time and helps ensure regulatory compliance.

Avalara Business Licenses helps hospitality businesses of all sizes obtain the federal, state, county, and city licenses they need. Businesses can offload the application and renewal process to trained Avalara experts.

CHALLENGE 5

Managing vendor and contractor tax compliance

Many hospitality management companies hire a large number of contractors and vendors – janitorial crews, general contractors, security services, event planners, IT service providers, freelance marketing consultants, and massage therapists to name a few.

IRS regulations require your business to file Form 1099-NEC for nonemployee compensation above a certain threshold. Incorrect or missing 1099 filings can result in IRS penalties. Misclassifying workers can lead to substantial fines and legal issues.

As 1099 tax laws evolve, businesses need real-time updates to stay on top of changing reporting requirements. Before 2020, businesses reported nonemployee compensation on Form 1099-MISC then the IRS revived Form 1099-NEC, which hadn't been in use since 1982.

Manually tracking who qualifies for Form 1099-NEC and ensuring forms are properly filled out is time-consuming and increases the likelihood of making a mistake.

CHALLENGE 6

Handling multistate property tax obligations

Hotel chains own a lot of real estate. They also own a lot of tangible personal property – items like beds, dressers, and TVs; computers for the reception desk and back office; and tables and kitchen appliances if they have a restaurant.

Hospitality companies pay property tax on both real estate and tangible personal property. Managing property tax compliance is especially complex if you have many properties across multiple jurisdictions. It can also be incredibly time-consuming.

Property tax compliance is still a paper-based process. Your business must track and respond to mailed assessment notices, returns, and bills. Some states and counties are introducing e-filing, while others still require businesses to file paper returns.

Reviewing your assessments to ensure valuations are fair is especially challenging if your property data is scattered across spreadsheets or teams.

Tracking deadlines for filing returns, submitting appeal requests, and sending payments can be cumbersome if you still use a wall calendar. Missing a due date can lead to fines and penalties, while not filing your appeal on time can mean paying more tax than you should.

HOW AVALARA CAN HELP

An advanced automated property tax compliance solution can reduce risk and give your team more time for tasks that drive profits.

Automating data entry saves time and increases accuracy. Centralizing compliance management helps your finance team stay organized by providing immediate access to forms. System-maintained jurisdictional deadlines and auto-populated due date tracking help your team quickly spot missing notices or bills before they become liabilities.
